POULTRY

VACCINE WILL SAVE LOSSES IN FLOCKS

Value Demonstrated by Experiments.

Chicken pox, a disease which annually takes a heavy toll in Illinois poultry flocks, can now be controlled with more safety as a result of experiments which the division of animal pathology and hygiene, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois, has made during the past year with different vaccines.

Pigeon pox vaccine proved superior to chicken pox vaccine, and consequently the former is being recommended to farmers and flock owners.

Proper vaccination at this season of the year will prevent losses from chicken pox, which is a common disease during the winter months, according to the laboratory. There is no medicine which will cure the infection, but vaccination will prevent it. Growers of stock that is running on range should be vaccinated during June, July and August. If vaccination is put off until fall, egg production may be lowered as a result of the extra handling of the birds as well as by the reaction from the vaccine.

Potent vaccines properly administered to healthy, young chickens produce an immunity against chicken pox that probably lasts for a year or longer. It is important, however, that chickens be free from intestinal parasites and other diseases before they are vaccinated.

The pigeon pox vaccine which is now being recommended causes less reaction than the chicken pox vaccine, and therefore may be used with less danger. A practical immunity is induced by the pigeon pox product. A limited supply of the vaccine prepared by the division of animal pathology and hygiene is available at a nominal cost to qualified veterinarians for demonstration purposes. Veterinarians taking advantage of this supply are required to make a careful record of the vaccination, age and condition of the chickens vaccinated on blanks furnished for the purpose.

Keeping Poultry House Dry Not an Easy Matter

There is a fairly general opinion that dry air is lighter than damp air, and this opinion has some influence upon methods of poultry house ventilation. As a matter of fact, air rises as it becomes saturated with moisture, which makes it obvious that the out-let for moist, impure air should be near the top of the house if this excess moisture is to be removed by air circulation. On the other hand, the air intake should be somewhat lower, and then the fresh, cool, dry air will enter the house and accumulate near the floor, where it takes up moisture as it becomes warmer.

The principal difficulty comes during periods when the outside air is practically saturated with moisture before it enters the house. In such cases, the only practical way to keep the house dry is to raise the temperature inside the house. Although the body heat of the birds will raise the temperature some, it has been found that artificial heat is essential if the house is to be kept absolutely dry.

Brooding Problems

Chicks that are confined to a brooder house require much more room than those that are permitted to range during a part of the day. The average 10-by-12-foot brooder will accommodate only 300 chicks when confined, and from 300 to 400 when they are on range. Chicks that are reared in confinement are more susceptible to vices such as feather-pulling and cannibalism than those on range. Greater sanitation in the brooder is necessary when chicks are confined, and producers who use wire floors in the brooders escape many of the losses which sometimes are had on regular floors. Frequently, it will pay to build a wire porch on the front of the house so as to get the chicks out in the sun a part of the time.

Medicated Eggs

Most medicated or artificial nest eggs often recommended for controlling poultry parasites are nothing but ordinary naphthalene, of which moth balls are made, and are of no use whatever against lice, mites, and other parasites of poultry, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Naphthalene, explains the department, in a bulletin, does not kill or drive away poultry parasites, and may even injure good eggs and give a moth-ball flavor to the flesh.

Keep Chicks Cool

Shade is essential for successful brooding of late-hatched chicks. In early spring brooding, ninety degrees Fahrenheit at the edge of the hover is warm enough for the first week. After that the temperature can be lowered five degrees a week until 70 degrees Fahrenheit is reached. After chicks are five weeks old they need heat only at night. With late-hatched chicks it is hard to keep the temperatures low enough and vitality is sapped.—Prairie Farmer.

Alta Hendrickson and Linwood Andrews have returned to their school work at West Paris High.

The new double house built by Alton Bacon for the Andrews' is practically completed and is one of the most modern and up-to-date residences in town.

Union School began Jan. 2. And how glad the children seem to be. We are proud of this school which is one of the best in the State.

The Andrews boys, "Pete and Stan," are playing every Saturday night for the Legion dances in the Town Hall at Locke Mills. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity Saturday evening, Dec. 31. The old year was bid good by and the New Year wished in among much merriment.

Albert Russ, our representative to the State legislature at Augusta, left here Monday, Jan. 2, and will at once take up his duties at the Capital City.

Mrs. Andrew Rose entertained company on New Year's day.

Gayden Davis is doing quite a business in wood marketing.

Harry Silver and son Durward are cutting wood for Gayden Davis.

The Willing Workers met at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Gayden Davis on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 28, and were most delightfully entertained by Mrs. Davis and little daughter Edith Menola. On account of illness not as many as usual were out, there being only 12 women and six children present, all of whom took part in enjoying a very pleasant programme. Dainty refreshments of assorted cake, cocoa and coffee were served. The radio furnished some beautiful selections and all departed at a late hour planning to meet at the home of some other member Jan. 11.

Miss Helva Halkinen will continue her studies at Woodstock High, Bryant Pond.

Miss Elsie Abbott of Woodstock and Alma Milkken of Paris have returned to Farmington Normal.

Some are wont to criticize the Army for starting practice September 1st, when their own teams do not start until the 15th. But, feeling that way, why schedule games with the Army?

The New Hampshire University varsity cross country team showed power and balance in winning the N. E. L. C. A. A. races and it was a shame they did not compete in the inter-collegiate championship at New York.

BRITAIN'S HEAVIEST

The above-pictured youth is the undisputed champion of the dubious honor of being "Great Britain's heaviest boy." Although but sixteen years of age, Ivan Langley of Norfolk weighs 420 pounds.

This is largely a world of tears: a baby doesn't have to be told that.

TWO-MINUTE SERMON

BY REV. GEORGE HENRY

LAW

The law must be obeyed, or we must take the consequences. This is true of our legal enactments, of natural law, and no less of spiritual law. The law is beneficent. It is not designed to interfere with our freedom, but to conserve our liberty. All that we suffer, mental, spiritual, physical, is due to the transgression of law. Ignorance of law does not affect its consequence. Primary law (God's law) is inexorable and so is the penalty of its infringement. Obedience brings happiness and disobedience spells disaster. God gave us a river that flowed toward the sea. Man built a great dam that held the water back. The dam burst and death and destruction resulted. This was according to God's law of gravitation, but contrary to His plan. God is good. He has given us every reason to conform to His beneficent laws. The voice of wisdom says, "Obey the law."

BRYANT POND

Mrs. Addelyn Mann and Miss Elsie Abbott attended the 4-H Club contest at Orono last week.

Quite a number around here are sick with the grippe.

Dannie Bryant has been at home the past week from his work at Bethel.

James Billings had three teeth knocked out and his hip cut quite badly while playing hockey one day recently.

Elsie Abbott returned to Farmington Normal School Monday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cole, Mrs. Carl Dudley and Mrs. Florence Cushman were in Lewiston and Auburn on last Thursday.

The Farm Bureau will hold their planning meeting, Monday, Jan. 9.

Don't Pass On A Curve

Motor Vehicle Administrators of the United States, the men who know, will describe a series of traffic violations and driving errors responsible for a majority of automobile accidents and advise how they may be avoided. This is number six of the series.

By JOE B. WILLIAMS
(Chief of the Tennessee Highway Patrol)

DON'T PASS ON A CURVE. If you do you may be responsible for one of the most serious automobile accidents.

If you put yourself in the dangerous position of the driver of the black car in the picture, and another car comes around the curve from the opposite direction, a bad head-on collision cannot be avoided. These accidents, because they are usually of the head-on collision type, are often fatal.

Last year, according to the statistics of the National Bureau of Casualty and Underwriters, 2,470 persons were killed and 39,080 were hurt in 34,870 accidents of this kind.

This was a needless waste of life, limb, and property, for all these accidents were avoidable.

Safe drivers follow the rule set forth in the Model Municipal Traffic Ordinance prepared by the National Conference on Street and

Highway Safety. It says: "The driver of a vehicle shall not drive to the left side of the center line of a highway in overtaking and passing another vehicle proceeding in the same direction unless such left side is clearly visible and is free of oncoming traffic for a sufficient distance ahead to permit such overtaking and passing to be completely made without impeding the safe operation of any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction or any vehicle overtaken, nor shall the driver of a vehicle in any event drive to the left side of the center line of a highway when approaching the crest of a grade or upon a curve in the highway where the driver's view along the highway is obstructed within a distance of five hundred (500) feet."

DON'T PASS ANOTHER CAR UNTIL YOU ARE CERTAIN IT IS SAFE TO DO SO.

The Bridge

By RAYMOND OTIS

"IS THERE a high bridge on this line—a very high bridge—that we cross at night?"

She was a pretty woman, about thirty. It was surprising that she should speak to me; she didn't look like the aggressive kind. But she had spoken and I liked her looks, so I stood up in the aisle of the pullman.

"A bridge?" I said. "There must be many of them between here and the coast, especially where we cross the mountains."

"Well, this must be an unusual bridge—not over a river—a great span over an abyss. And deep—deeper than anything."

"Are you going through this time, all the way?"

"Yes, I am—What about the bridge? Why does it bother you?"

"I'll tell you," she said. "Listen. Last night I had a dream. I dreamt that this train came to a great bridge. And the bridge was broken. The train ran into the gap, and . . ."

She paused to shudder . . . "plunged a thousand feet to the rocks below."

"Well," I said, "that was a dream. Anybody killed?"

"Everybody. My dream was prophetic!"

I shifted uneasily. "What do you mean by prophetic, exactly?"

"Well—I don't know. I saw the things so clearly—every detail as if a great searchlight were playing on the scene. If there is such a bridge I wouldn't go over it for a fortune."

"If you'll excuse me, I'll go back for a smoke," I said. She simply nodded and I went to the smoking room.

To save my life I couldn't get the picture out of my mind. Then I spotted a time-table on the window-sill. I turned a page and there was a span exactly as she had described. I read the legend under the picture. "One of the highest railroad bridges in the world," it said, "on the main line to California. Canyon Fiero."

I looked up on the map, which was also in the folder, the town nearest the bridge and then searched the time-table for the hour at which we were due at that town. Eight the next evening. So we did go over the bridge at night. Of course, all the time I was telling myself not to be a fool. I slipped the folder into my pocket and went back into the car.

"ardon me," I said to the dreamer, "but I've looked up your bridge . . . and at that I handled her the folder, opened to the picture. And I watched her face minutely.

"My God," she said in a throaty voice, "it's the bridge—it's the very bridge! When do we cross it?"

"Tomorrow night, between eight and nine."

"I'm going to get off this train," she said, smiling to rise.

"Not now," I objected. "We don't get there until tomorrow night."

She settled back in the seat. Her hands twitched nervously. She declared that unless the conductor would consent to stop the train at the bridgehead, she would get off at the first station before it.

By morning, a strange thing had happened. The whole train was talking about the Canyon Fiero bridge.

Nobody, I thought, had yet consulted the conductor about stopping the train at the bridgehead, so I accented him myself when he came through the car. Had he heard about the dream?

"Yes, I've heard about it. We don't make a custom of stopping the train because of dreams. But I wired ahead and got a notification to proceed. There's nothing wrong with the bridge."

Nothing could be more convincing than that. But the Russian, who had overheard the talk, suddenly flew out of her seat and came up to us.

"Don't you see what it is?" she said. "Of course they're not going to break the bridge until it's too late for telegrams. It may be a plot. Sabotage!"

"Very well, madam. I'll stop the train."

"Thank you," she said, and turned away.

At eight o'clock we came to the last town before Canyon Fiero.

"No reports on the bridge," said the conductor and we started on.

The Russian woman nibbled the corner of her handkerchief. All through the train there was a remarkable atmosphere of tension. The train slowed down, came to an effortless stop—silence. I got out and walked up toward the engine. I thought I saw the Russian ahead of me. There was a cluster of people around the engine.

When I reached the coal tender I noticed that everybody had suddenly lined up along the wheels and I heard a voice barking crisp commands. It was on the moonlit side of the train and the visibility was good. I felt a jab in the ribs.

"Get a move on!" somebody said in my ear. "Line up with the rest." It was the Russian woman, with a revolver.

"They ransacked the baggage cars and relieved the passengers of their money. Their last act before departing in automobiles waiting with their motors running was to rob those of us who had got out and stood with the crew. Then they herded us back on the train. I saw in the moonlight as the door slammed an oval face framed in black hair. She blew me a kiss as the train pulled away."

"Thank you," she said, and turned away.

At eight o'clock we came to the last town before Canyon Fiero.

"No reports on the bridge," said the conductor and we started on.

The Russian woman nibbled the corner of her handkerchief. All through the train there was a remarkable atmosphere of tension. The train slowed down, came to an effortless stop—silence. I got out and walked up toward the engine. I thought I saw the Russian ahead of me. There was a cluster of people around the engine.

When I reached the coal tender I noticed that everybody had suddenly lined up along the wheels and I heard a voice barking crisp commands. It was on the moonlit side of the train and the visibility was good. I felt a jab in the ribs.

"Get a move on!" somebody said in my ear. "Line up with the rest." It was the Russian woman, with a revolver.

"They ransacked the baggage cars and relieved the passengers of their money. Their last act before departing in automobiles waiting with their motors running was to rob those of us who had got out and stood with the crew. Then they herded us back on the train. I saw in the moonlight as the door slammed an oval face framed in black hair. She blew me a kiss as the train pulled away."
